

Bifunctional Constituent Assembly

The Bifunctional Constituent Assembly was a special assembly during the final phase of British India. The word "bifunctional" means that it had two main functions at the same time: making laws for the country and drafting the constitution.

1. As a legislative body, it acted like a parliament to make laws and manage the administration of the country.
2. As a constituent assembly, it prepared the constitution that would guide the future governance of the nation.

When India was divided in 1947, the original Constituent Assembly of India split into two separate assemblies: - India's Constituent Assembly – To make the Indian Constitution. - Pakistan's Constituent Assembly – To make Pakistan's Constitution.

The Bifunctional Constituent Assembly was very important because it allowed both countries to start self-governance while also preparing their constitutions for the future. It played a crucial role in ensuring a smooth transition from British rule to independent governments.
